Hay movement continues to be limited due to large supplies and lack of winter snow cover. Farmers are feeding slightly more hay with each passing week but many farmers with low cattle inventories still have cattle eating what is left of stockpiled pastures. Hay piles in several cases still look untouched with many bales still left of the 2013 crop, which due to that year's growing conditions has very little feed value left. Although if ran through a grinder and supplemented with the abundance of available corn is quite suitable for feeding. The supply of hay is moderate to heavy and demand is light. Prices are mostly steady.
