Missouri Weekly Hay Summary- Week ending 08/27/10

Temperatures cool enough to make a few in the valleys grab a jacket for morning chores was a great relief this week. Fall corn harvest has just begun in a few of the far southern counties of the state. Conditions in some of the southern counties have continued to decline all summer. Pastures the south central region are now rated as 96 percent poor to very poor. There has been supplemental feeding as well as some cattle being sold due to the dryness in that area. Farmers in areas to the north are at the total opposite end of the chart and have pasture ratings of nearly 65 percent good to excellent. Fall hay cutting has begun in some areas where farmers have had adequate to excess moisture all year and been able to run cattle with only the worry of the river washing them away all summer. The supply of hay is moderate, demand moderate, and prices steady.
